Voting essential to maintain democracy

Today the 2012 election cycle comes to an end. With it, thousands of political voices and laws will be added to our nation's lexicon thanks to the voices of millions of citizens. Among those voices should be University students, expressing their personal beliefs and ideologies in hopes of creating visions of a better country.

Unfortunately, due to a marked difference in the tenor of college-aged emphasis about President Barack Obama compared to 2008, and in conjunction with historically low rates of youth engagement, the possibility of truly changing the political climate in the next one year is bleak. Plenty of solutions have been proffered to fix this, from Jay-Z and Bruce Springsteen campaigning with the President to Livin' in Pashan of Public Radio. But the question remains.

The simple fact of the matter, however, is that voting is an essential form of participation in the democratic process and those of age must participate in order for the system to succeed.

In an article titled "A Critical Turning Point" (04-11, page 18), I noted that when a status quo begins to reflect our collective action, America is just but only the beginning of a process of specialization and our nation is built by all of us.

Often people forget this. They become more concerned with how their personal brand of politics reflects upon themselves and fail to consider how their political beliefs - particularly from the viewpoint of their creative, entrepreneurial, and economic future of the country. This country public and private entrepreneurship is the most important element in our modern world. This nation therefore becomes the cornerstone of who we are as Americans and herein lies the power of our nation. Europe simply has little to offer because of the economic and cultural divide. This is going to be the time and the task where the difference between success and failure becomes most obvious. The economy is what stands in your path at this time. It is a very significant issue in our lives. Our jobs are at stake, and our economic freedom is in the balance. This is a very critical time. This is going to be a time when change will come about. This is the time to show up at the polls to fulfill our duty.

Today the 2012 election cycle ends and a new one begins. The only change you'll see this cycle is through the work of the citizens. The citizens are the ones who will make the change. If we don't have the right people in office to do what's right for America, our country will suffer.

The Republican Party and its presidential candidate, Mitt Romney, failed. Of course, they did. After all, you bring 'B' to the AAP. Nevertheless, they are the ones that we need to elect a new, strong President. The election is over, but the work has just begun. The United States has been through a very difficult economic period and our economy looks to be on the rise. The problems we face today are complex and require a strong leader to make sure our country is in the right direction.

The economy is one of the most important issues facing the country today. The nation's economy is more important than ever before. It is the foundation of our society. Our economy is the backbone of our country. It provides us with the resources we need to build a strong, prosperous future. It is the key to our success and prosperity.

The Daily announced that President Barack Obama named a new Cabinet position of chief executive officer (CEO) for the US. This position has been created to help address the economic challenges facing the country. The CEO will work closely with the President to develop policies and strategies to improve economic growth and job creation, and to ensure that the economy is on a sustainable path for the future.

The Daily's announcement was well-received by many who believe that a new CEO position is needed to help address the economic challenges facing the country. The CEO will be responsible for providing leadership and oversight of the national economy, working with Congress to develop policies and strategies to improve economic growth and job creation, and ensuring that the economy is on a sustainable path for the future.
