IMMUNIZING MICHIGAN

The University should require vaccinations for the safety of students.

With the recent outbreaks of influenza in Michigan and across the country, the importance of early prevention has come to the forefront of public conversations. Healthful practices and safety precautions are being emphasized as never before. Proven effective vaccines stand strong in the University's lackluster vaccination program. The University must improve its vaccination program and promote a vaccination-prevention program as whole for the health and safety of students.

Vacines work. The advance of disease like smallpox, polio, rubella, measles, mumps, chicken pox, hepatitis B, meningococcal meningitis, and many others, has been largely due to the use and effectiveness of vaccines. These vaccines have been shown effective across studies and in various demographics. Vaccines work.

A recent article in the Journal of the American Medical Association states that the University of Michigan's program is among the worst of the nation's top 50 institutions. The University's current program is among the lowest for all college-aged students, and this is not acceptable. The University of Michigan's education system does not provide the best experience for its students. There is a lack of vaccination promotion upon acceptance—through course literature, orientations, and the health fair held on campus.

Michigan should contact the entire nation regarding vaccination at a conditio of excellence. The University should have a better vaccination program and promote a vaccination-prevention program as whole for the health and safety of students.

Charity is a quick fix

The buildings are officially open. Wrapping paper is strewn across the campus, and the snow is in fear. No longer the main event of the year, the renovation continues. The snow is melting, and the warmth of the early spring is coming. The snow is melting, and the warmth of the early spring is coming. People and students are walking around, enjoying the warmth of the early spring.

Charity is a quick fix. People want to do something, to help those who are in need, to feel good about themselves. Charity is a quick fix, but it is not a solution.
